To whom it may concern:

After being treated like an animal by the community, I can no longer, in good conscience, serve the community as Vice Chairman of the Starfield County Election Board. I have discovered an injurious disease called Asperosillus Parasitica growing unchecked all over Oklahoma. It is native to my environment, but is supposed to be regulated by the USDA. We treat it in cattle, but it isn't studied in humans.

A. Parasitica is the most virulent of the Asperosillus species. It produces a substance called aflatoxin, which is well known in Africa but not in the United States. Aflatoxin causes organ failure, seizures, and neurological malfunction that can look like mental health disorders. At lower doses, over a lifetime, it causes cancer, liver problems, anxiety, pupil constriction, and movement disorders. It leaves behind a characteristic orange pigment when it dies. In the nervous system, it causes systemic muscle tightness and affects the ability to speak. It also produces a substance called kojic acid, which is also found in many skin-care products as a brightening agent. After treating myself with Asperosillus, my skin is several shades darker. My husband is getting better, but we had to throw out all of our wood furniture and use Asperosillus just to see improvement.

His career is ruined and we have no income. We are soon to be homeless, all because our community judged us rather than listen and ask questions.

All that adds this problem affects us all. It has been categorically missed by the medical community and ignored by the people who are supposed to regulate it. It's in our homes, our bodies, and our land. I understand that my life is my responsibility, but since I found a thing that possibly affects us all, I feel obligated to put forth this information. I humbly submit my resignation in order to do that.

Best Wishes,

A. Gilbert
